OPINION DATA

Opinion number: 1.499.787

Project presentation:

The project is a retrospective study that aims to correlate the size of the cervix in the first trimester and to correlate with the presence of preterm birth. The presentation of the project is adequate.

Research Purpose:

The study aims to assess the length of the cervix in the first trimester and assess the predictive capacity of this method in identifying spontaneous preterm birth before 34 weeks and 37 weeks.

Assessment of Risks and Benefits:

Minimal risks for those involved in the research.

Comments and Considerations on the Research:

The results in the literature on the usefulness of the size of the cervix in the prediction of prematurity are discrepant. The methodology proposed in the present study can assess whether the size of the cervix can be a predictive factor.
